Flames and smoke rise in the air after a Saudi-led air strike hit Yemen's Houthi-held capital Sanaa, Yemen, April 10, 2016. REUTERS/Khaled Abdullah "This is the kingdom's right and it is its duty to protect its lands, its people," said an official Saudi statement referring to the strikes on the rebel-held capital Sanaa and other southern provinces. In the past four days, the Houthis have taken several Saudi towns near the border and the air strikes have intensified. Houthi-run Al Masirah television station said at least seven people had been killed in a joint Saudi-UAE air strike on a market area in Saada, and three people had been killed by a Saudi air strike on the city of Saada. The station showed no evidence to support its reports. It said earlier that a total of 11 people had been killed by coalition air strikes in Yemen on Tuesday and that the army was pursuing Houthis in Marib province. The Houthis fired a rocket at the Saudi capital, Riyadh, the day before and on Tuesday also targeted the Al-Daila border post, a military source in Riyadh said. The Houthis, a group that seized control of the capital Sanaa in September, ba244e880a
