On Wednesday, Twitter is introducing a new "Trending Topics" module that will surface in the service's right sidebar some of the people, topics and hashtags most likely to engage users' interest in near-real-time, a company spokesperson told Business Insider. In a blog post announcing the change, Twitter vice president of product Adam Bain said the move will help those who use the service to navigate through messages on their smartphone. "It's going to be visible near-in-real-time at all times," Bain said. The news comes just days after Obama criticized the role Facebook and other social media companies play in online content, specifically in the aggregation of news. Facebook's approach to news distribution was thrust into the spotlight after it was revealed in a report by The Wall Street Journal that the company has been working to remove news stories from trending topics from its service. Bain's post states that "Trending Topics" will only appear on Twitter users' timelines and will not replace Twitter's Trending Topics category, which still exists on the Web. Under the new module, Twitter will serve up a series of trending topics related to topics and hashtags that are popular at the moment. Some of those topics will also appear in Twitter's new Trending Topics category. Powered by data collected from Twitter users, Trending Topics will surface to users the topics that are the most talked about by a majority of the Twitter user base. The company's goal is to introduce something of value for its users and help them navigate through content on the platform in real-time. Previously, the company only served up content that was automatically generated from user activities. Under the new module, Twitter will serve up a series of trending topics related to topics and hashtags that are popular at the moment. The Trending Topics module will also be available on the service's mobile applications. "One of the most common complaints we hear is that people want more visibility into what is happening right now and on Twitter," Bain wrote. "

To assess the effects of a psychoeducational self-care programme on eating attitudes, behaviours and weight status of women with gestational diabetes mellitus (GDM). A quasi-experimental design using a pretest-posttest control group. Two obstetrics and gynaecology clinics in eastern Taiwan. Forty women diagnosed with GDM and free of major diseases. Women with GDM who participated in the psychoeducational self-care programme for 6 months had significant improvements in their general eating attitudes, physical activity and dietary behaviours. They also had significant reductions in their body mass index (BMI), insulin resistance and diastolic blood pressure. Conversely, there was no significant effect of the programme on weight gain, eating behaviours and stress management. The findings suggest that the psychoeducational self-care programme could be an effective intervention for reducing the BMI of women with GDM.* Copyright 2012 Red Hat, Inc. and/or its affiliates. * Licensed under the Apache License, Version 2.0 (the "License"); * you may not use this file except in compliance with the License. * You may obtain a copy of the License at * * * * Unless required by applicable law or agreed to in writing, software * distributed under the License is distributed on an "AS IS" BASIS, * WITHOUT WARRANTIES OR CONDITIONS OF ANY KIND, either express or implied. * See the License for the specific language governing permissions and * limitations under the License. */ package org.drools.workbench.models.guided.dg.decisiongraphs.editor; import java.util.HashSet; import java. 2d92ce491b
