The present invention relates to a technology for mounting micro-computers onto a vehicle, and particularly to a technology for mounting micro-computers on a vehicle such as a bus, a truck, and a car. Since micro-computers perform a great variety of complicated operations such as a machine cycle control, a diagnostic operation, and a detection of a vehicle engine speed, a steering angle, a transmission ratio and the like, reliability of the micro-computer is extremely important.

Particularly, since a technology for mounting the micro-computer onto a vehicle such as a bus, a truck, and a car must have reliability in all of its handling and operating characteristics, an assembly process of the vehicle must be complicated, and many man-hours must be expended in order to test reliability of the micro-computer. Moreover, due to the complicated assembly process of the vehicle, a final product costs are increased, and a production efficiency is deteriorated. To avoid these problems, various mounting methods for mounting a micro-computer on a vehicle have been proposed. In JP-A-62-109877, a micro-computer is mounted by a structure in which a signal line of the micro-computer is connected through a circuit board to a terminal board on which a connector is provided. In JP-A-62-109878, a micro-computer is mounted by a structure in which a first circuit board and a second circuit board are connected through a connector. In JP-A-62-109879, a micro-computer is mounted by a structure in which
