Bundled care for children with special health care needs: changes in utilization and charges before and after the California Kids Health Act. Children's health status and utilization patterns of California public and private sector insurance coverage are important aspects of the evolution of pediatric health care. The study addressed the impact of the introduction of a comprehensive premium rate redesign and delivery system reform under the California Kids Health Act (Healthy Kids). Provider-based data of same period for each of the preceding 3 years were obtained from the California Office of Statewide Health Planning and Development. Paired comparisons were conducted on children with special health care needs in the public and private sectors. The self-pay private sector quintupled and increased from 50% to 220% of total children's visits. Total sector private outpatient services increased by 47%, but total outpatient services in the public sector decreased by 9.6%. The study results suggest that the Healthy Kids Act, although improving the efficiency of the delivery system, decreased the utilization of children's services. The results also indicate that the increased self-pay private sector utilization is attributable to changes in the delivery system rather than to other factors.
