Thousands of San Diego's public-school students have been walking out of their classrooms every day, sometimes all day, in protest of the Trump administration's "zero tolerance" policy of separating migrant children from their parents at the U.S.-Mexico border. Protesters are rallying at the downtown

San Diego courthouse and at their schools. Many are demanding an end to the policy, saying it is traumatizing children and that the government should put in place other procedures to protect the children. Thousands of public-school students walk out of class in protest of Trump

— LAist (@LAist) May 4, 2018 The policy, launched in early May and aimed at detering families from attempting to cross the border illegally, has been called a deterrent to migration and has drawn criticism from both sides of the aisle. The anti-Trump protest started early this week with more than a million students being expected to take part. Tens of thousands of students have been leaving class and walking out of their schools on a daily basis since the early morning of May 4th. While the protest has garnered attention nationwide, it has not impacted the border situation in San Diego and was not in response to a specific immigration action. “They are calling themselves ‘Rising Against School to Stop the Zero Tolerance’ and their Facebook page can be found here: They have been giving interviews, telling their stories to the media and posting on social media, encouraging students to attend school or not attend school. “The principal of a high school in Murrieta, California, said the walkouts there have been peaceful and “generally speaking, students are taking the day off. But when class resumes, students are walking in as they would any other day,” NBC News reported. “In Compton, California, more than 1,000 students have walked out of school.” Some students in Dallas, Texas, refused to go to school today. More than 1000 students in Pflugerville, Texas walked out of class Thursday in protest of the Trump administration's immigration policy. A few students in Comal County, Texas have also been walking out of class to demand an end to
